Interpretative phenomenological analysis - Wikipedia Interpretative phenomenological analysis (IPA) is an approach to psychological qualitative research with an idiographic focus, which means that it aims to offer insights into how a given person, in a given context, makes sense of a given phenomenon. Usually these phenomena relate to experiences of some personal significance, such as a major life event, or the development of an important relationship. Phenomenological Interpretation of Descartes their own methodologies in Phenomenology, their works are determined by a critique of Descartes' ideas. By exploring their critiques and showing how Phenomenology itself arises out of Descartes' Meditations1, an alternative interpretation of Descartes will come to light; one that is different from the one that has shaped Modernity.
